ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

THIS WORK IS THE FUSION OF MY OWN research over the last quarter of a century in various archives in Central Europe, on the one hand, and, on the other hand, of the findings of the most important new research from Hungarian and international historiography—from Oxford to Vienna and Budapest to Cluj-Napoca. I do not have the space to list the many dozen American, Canadian, British, French, Dutch, Belgian, Spanish, German, Austrian, Czech, Slovak, Croatian, Slovenian, Romanian, Polish, Turkish, Russian, and Hungarian historians and archivists who supported my work and with whom I could do so much thinking about the history of early modern Hungary and of the Habsburg Monarchy and the Ottoman Empire. So I would express my heartfelt thanks to all of them at once. I would, however, like to thank Professor Pál Fodor, director general of the Research Center for the Humanities, without whose persistent encouragement I would not have completed this task. I am also indebted to David Robert Evans for his excellent and constructive work on the translation of the book. Most of all, I would like to thank my wife, Magdolna, for tranquil family surroundings and support at so many levels, providing the ideal opportunity for creative work even in the hubbub of today's world.
